FOREWORD

It is my privilege to welcome the Australian team and officials for this inaugural home and away series.

Both teams will I am sure be well prepared and the struggle for the Winfield Trans Tasman Cup is sure to be an enthralling one.

We are grateful to Winfield for their assistance in making this possible and especially as the potential 1990 World Cup players will be on view in the curtain raiser, in the shape of the Youth players of both countries.

I hope this is a successful weekend for all concerned and that our relationship with the sponsor is a long lasting one.

Best wishes to all concerned.

New All White strikers

By DAVID PETRASKA

It's almost a year to the day since Kevin Fallon's All Whites tore Israel apart at Mount Smart in one of the finest performances in New Zealand soccer history.

On 26 October 1985, goals from Wynton Rufer, Malcolm Dunford and Colin Walker put the Israelis out of the World Cup.

A week later New Zealand took the field in Sydney knowing that victory over Australia would see the Kiwis through to a play-off with Scotland for the 24th spot in the 1986 World Cup finals in Mexico.

It's history now that the Socceroos won 2-0 in a match that left the whole of New Zealand wondering how the All Whites could play so well one week and so poorly the next.

Today Kevin Fallon's side have the chance to avenge that defeat in the first leg of the inaugural Winfield Trans Tasman Cup series.

With the Socceroos likely to prove the All Whites' major opposition, along with Israel, in the Oceania qualifying section for the Seoul Olympics, the importance of today's fixture is clearly evident.

The New Zealand squad for the series contains a mixture of youth and experience, with a core of established All Whites complementing a group of six players with only 17 international appearances between them.

Dave Witteveen, Andy Deeley, Noel Barkley, Allan Gilgrist, Mike McGarry and Darren McClennan all made their debuts for the All Whites this year against the Soviet Union eleven or Fiji.

And with no disrespect to the skilful Soviets or Fiji, there is no substitute for the white hot competition of a clash between New Zealand and Australia in any sporting code.

Unfortunately our rugby, rugby league and hockey sides have been on the receiving end of Australian victories this year and, make no mistake, the Socceroos will be out to complete a clean sweep of winter sports by winning this first Trans Tasman series.

Whether they are successful or not will largely depend on how well the All Whites' new look strike force performs. McClennan, Deeley and Barkley are the three strikers competing for the two front-runner's berths. 1986 has been a remarkable year for the trio. McClennan scored one and set up two goals in Hanimex North Shore's 4-1 triumph in the second leg of the Le Coq Sportif Chatham Cup final against Balfour Roofing Mt Maunganui, Deeley won the Golden Boot by finishing top scorer in the National League with 18 goals, while Barkley helped Mt Maunganui win the Swiss Maid league and become the first non-league side to reach the Chatham Cup final since 1978.

Whichever combination lines up against the Aussies faces a formidable task. The All Whites' deadly duo of Wynton Rufer and Colin Walker failed to score in 180 minutes of World Cup football against the Socceroos last year.

Hopefully that's a strike rate on which the new All White front-runners can improve, and pave the way for a New Zealand victory in the first ever Winfield Trans Tasman series.

POSB YOUTH ALL WHITES

Today also sees the first outing for the POSB Youth All Whites. Coaches Barrie Truman and Don Jones picked their team from last weekend's Under 19 regional tournament in New Plymouth.

The match against the young Socceroos will be a vital gauge of New Zealand's chances of winning the Oceania qualifying section for the 1987 World Youth Cup. The Oceania winner gains direct entry to the finals, to be held in Chile next year. The qualifying games will be played in January in New Zealand.

Two more players will be added to today's squad of 16 for the qualifying games.

New-look Socceroos

By DAVID PETRASKA

The Australian squad to compete in the inaugural Winfield Trans Tasman Cup series against New Zealand has a rather inexperienced look about it, for of the eighteen players selected, only six — Jeff Olver, Charlie Yankos, Robbie Dunn, Graham Jennings, Graham Arnold and Frank Farina — have more than 10 caps to their names.

It's a situation brought about by the retirement of key players like John Kosmina, Joe Watson, Alan Davidson, Steve O'Connor and Terry Greedy, and made worse by the departure for Europe of Jim Patikas (to AEK Athens), David Mitchell (Eintracht Frankfurt) and Oscar Crino (Anorthosis of Cyprus).

Having lost eight of the 13 players used in the World Cup play-off against Scotland, Socceroo coach Frank Arok has been forced to start from scratch in the build up to the Oceania qualifying round for the Seoul Olympics.

Today's match and the return in Sydney a week tomorrow will give Arok an invaluable chance to test some of the younger players out at full international level.

Unfortunately such is the nature of sporting clashes between New Zealand and Australia that Arok's baby Socceroos also have to win, or else face the wrath of the Aussie press, as a loss to the "Shaky Isles" would be regarded as a disaster of endemic proportions.

Who could forget the drama surrounding the All Whites' 2-0 World Cup win at the SCG in 1981, when Rudi Gutendorf was ousted as coach minutes after the final whistle?

Defeat in the inaugural Winfield Trans Tasman series is unlikely to bring such repercussions upon Arok, but it would certainly give the colourful Yugoslav food for thought.

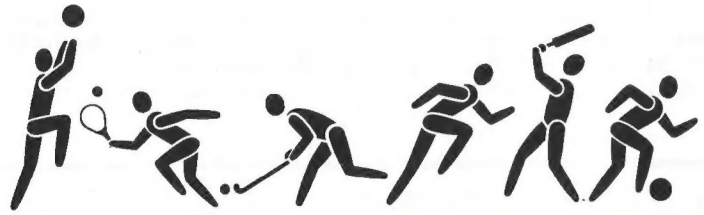
Now, the whole business of sports funding and advertising, through Harvard, is a quantifiable marketing exercise. With our help, Cricket, Tennis, Soccer, Netball, Hockey, Athletics and Rugby Bodies are turning sponsors' and advertisers' dollars into guaranteed returns.



Sporting bodies like the N.Z. Netball Association on one hand, and Advertisers like Milo on the other, are well aware of the power of Harvard sports management. Both have earned tangible returns from their involvement with Harvard's refreshingly professional approach to the subject.

Having rights to most major sporting venues in the country is only part of the story. Harvard involvement covers a wide range of activities, from ground signage, to programme production and advertising, hospitality facilities, scoreboard advertising, player endorsements, and overall activity-related sponsorship.

And Harvard's unique rotation of advertising signs ensures advertisers exposure, (when events are televised), at rates no other method can touch.

There are some very convincing case studies available on Harvard successes. Whether you're an advertiser, potential sponsor, sporting body, or advertising agency, a talk with the Harvard team will quickly open your eyes to great new opportunities for highly visible returns!
